SOL NEGRIN

Sol Negrin was born in New York City in 1929. After initially planning to become a Naval Architect, he decided to pursue his love for photography in the movie industry, starting as a Camera Assistant from 1948 to 1960. Later, Sol Negrin became a Camera Operator on mainstream television series, including "The Naked City", "The Defenders", "Car 54, Where are You?" and "The Patty Duke Show" as well as feature films ranging from "Frankenstein Meets the Spacemonster" to "Where's Poppa?" and "Across 110th Street".

Sol Negrin earned five Emmy nominations, three for episodes of the television series "Kojak" (1975, 1976, 1977), one for the television movie, "The Last Tenant" (1978) and one for an episode of the series "Baker's Dozen" (1982). His cinematography in television commercials earned four CLIO Awards, including that iconic American Tourister campaign of the bouncing suitcase made during the early 1970s. He was twice President of the International Cinematographer's Guild Local 644. As a Director of Photography, Negrin's feature film credits include "The Concert for Bangladesh" (1971), "Amazing Grace" (1974), "Proof of the Man" (1977) and "Parades" (1972). He also contributed additional cinematography to many feature films, some of which were "Crazy Joe" (1974), "Superman" (1972), "Coming to America" (1988), "King Kong" (1976), "Jaws 2" (1978) and "Robocop" (1987).

He shared his wealth of experience and expertise with students and aspiring filmmakers through mentorships, seminars, demonstrations and speaking engagements. He taught Advanced Cinematography at NYU, The School of Visual Arts and Five Towns College for more than a decade. He earned an honorary Doctorate of Fine Arts degree from Five Towns College in 2002. Sol Negrin is remembered for his love for his family, his passion for the film industry and his tireless efforts for teaching the next generation of image-makers.

As an enduring educator, the faculty and students of Five Towns College are proud that he worked arduously to help establish a top-notch Film/Television department. His passion and excellent pedagogy have left a permanent mark on this small campus and his memory lives on in the lives he touched.
